Course overview

On the 8th January 2001 guidance was published by the Health and Safety Commission regarding the control of Legionella bacteria in water systems. Recent Legionella outbreaks in the UK have led to a growing concern of this risk, which potentially exists in many organisations.

This course will provide you with a thorough understanding of the risks posed by Legionella. You will explore the key requirements for design, operation, monitoring and maintenance of water systems to control such risks.

Who should attend?

The training course is of vital interest for all individuals who are responsible for the management of legionellosis and particularly those who are involved in the design, operation, monitoring and maintenance of building water systems.

Prerequisites

None.

Objectives

Session one

- Growth requirements of Legionella, interactions of Legionella with other microbiota
- Factors affecting the accumulation of biofilm
- Effectiveness of biocides against Legionella, protozoa and biofilm
- When to use biocides, selection of biocides
- Effectiveness of temperature as a Legionella control method

Session two

- Cold and hot water storage design and upgrading, distribution system issues
- Showers, disposable and re-usable shower head filters.

Session three

- Discuss the design of other water systems and learn how to monitor, maintain and operate such systems. Including eg spa baths, hydrotherapy pools, decorative fountains, etc.

Session four

- Monitoring, Legionella sampling.
